Frank E. Langley, Publisher.

The average daily circulation of the Barre Daily Times for the week ending last Saturday was copies, the largest circulation of any daily paper in Vermont outside of Burlington.

5,950

Don't kill does? It may be costly.

Deerfield, Vt., was every field in Vermont today.

Judge Taylor is not a mollycoddle in passing out sentence.

President Taft must be glad to see how his cabinet looks once more.

There seems to be great need for business dealings and not good intentions in this recent job of paving in Barre.

DeBoer's dignified attitude toward the governorship of Vermont is winning him friends daily, as a rebuke to the "unseemly scramble" after high public office.

It is said that there is a chance that Colorado will send a woman to the United States Senate to take Teller's place. We trust this does not mean bargain prices on senatorial seats.

At last the game of bridge whist has been vindicated. A Mechanic Falls, Me., man who spent the greater part of the night playing it, quit just in time to detect robbers drilling the safe in the town's bank. Apparently the honors were all his.

The worst feature about taking photographic records of murder trial testimony is the possibility that the records may be perpetuated and foisted on the public at far distant dates. Imagine the Thaw case preserved on phonograph disks and reproduced.

How highly Joseph Pulitzer valued the newspaper profession is shown by his bequest of two million dollars to make competent members of the profession. Columbia university, by this bequest, stands in the way of being the great head and center of the comparatively new department of higher education, but the old school of experience will not go out of business entirely.

Having found the Danes too obnoxious in their attentions to him, Dr. Cook returns to the nice haven of the United States and will try himself out on the western states. The oppressed always did find what they wanted in this land of the free and home of the brave. Of course, the western states will treat the Doctor gently in sending him back to Brooklyn.

As far as mental ability is concerned, the newest class of registered nurses in Vermont is rated very high, as all of the thirteen candidates passed with high marks, the lowest being six points above the passing mark of 75. The efforts to increase the efficiency of this very important work, as shown in the regulation of examinations, are likely to result very successfully, and the wisdom of the change in the state's system is bound to show itself.

Governor Mann of Virginia and Governor Foss of Massachusetts added a few bricks to the national structure on the occasion of the Massachusetts soldiers' monument dedication at Petersburg, Va., this week. Given time enough, these speakers will entirely fill the breach caused by the "war of the states," as the Rebellion is now being called. For his part, Governor Foss of the Bay state seems to have been quite effective, showing that it is not alone in the field of politics that he can make his mark.

THE LONG WINTER EVENINGS.

With the approach of winter, with its cold and its snow and its storms, the football and the baseball are laid away and the allurements of outdoor life are decreased very largely, the young people who are in school should realize that now is the time for them to put in their best work of the school year. There are, or should be, fewer distractions from "All the knowledge of the world is open to whoever can read and the most interesting things in the world, except people, are books."

For little student or roaring youngster, here are correct clothes in which are combined, the reliability of the cloth, skill of the tailor and the makers. Suits from $3 to $8 for the youngest, up to $16 for biggest.

school work during the winter months when warm weather makes outdoor life more attractive. There are to be long winter evenings at home or in the school dormitory, when studying can be done to the best advantage, with the mind not loaded with thoughts of football, baseball, automobile and other features of active life in the open. No better use can be made of those evenings than to spend a certain length of time each evening with books. It need not be school books entirely; in fact, it is not desirable that all the attention be centered on text books, but rather that more diversified reading be followed, with a certain amount of good fiction included. But the habit of reading ought to be developed, and now is the time for the school children to begin in earnest. Let parents and teachers bear this in mind and encourage the children, and there are any doubt as to the right selections for reading, outside of school books, let the children consult with their teachers, school superintendent or principal. The hours spent in reading good literature they will find later on not to have been mispent.

CURRENT COMMENT

Clannishness.

The esteemed Burlington Clipper says "Vermont for Vermonters" may be a good watchword, but it looks a little too much like "Canada for the Canadians." And nothing could be truer. There is so much in national unity and loyalty that is commendable among men that it seems almost a pity to see good patriots and true carried away by the idea that somebody can squat down on some part of the earth's surface and by mere force of numbers fence off a part and tell the rest of humanity to "keep out."

The problem of statehood in the generations to come will be not merely to conserve certain natural national units that have been developed here and there on the globe by the mere force of circumstances, but to "make the bounds of freedom wider yet."

The time will come when our little geographical lines of demarcation that we call nations will appear trivial enough, and when the politically "meek will inherit the earth."—St. Albans Messenger.

Vermont and Connecticut.

It is just 150 years since Benning Wentworth, then royal governor of New Hampshire, granted charters to 60 towns in what is now the state of Vermont and many of these towns this year have noticed the anniversary with appropriate exercises. The grantees of the land in Vermont were mostly men from Connecticut, with a good-sized representation from Massachusetts and a few from Rhode Island. The Connecticut men dominated the situation and for a time the section of territory was known as New Connecticut; but the influence of that state did not last beyond a generation.

When the state of Vermont was forming the model of its laws was found in Connecticut and a coterie of Connecticut men ruled the state and wisely directed its destinies. As time went on, however, the people of Vermont came to disregard Connecticut traditions and gradually the tie that bound her to the older state was severed. In her place stood Massachusetts, for New York was unfriendly ground. To-day the relations between Vermont and Connecticut are insignificant, while commercially and socially the relations between Massachusetts and Vermont are close and cordial.

This change has been due largely to the proximity of the states and to the interchange of population. Connecticut would have served longer as a model if she had been geographically closer to the Green Mountain state. Present conditions have come about naturally, but it is a significant fact that these two New England states, that 150 years ago were as close as hand and glove, today are almost strangers.—Boston Globe.

Gov. Eugene N. Foss.

The re-election of Democratic Gov. Eugene N. Foss in Republican Massachusetts may or may not have a significance in relation to national politics about which the wise men may speculate and upon which the political philosophers ponder. This is about the time when prognostications for the campaign of 1912 are in order and no one in the professional line of prognostication would knowingly miss such an opportunity. To dwellers in St. Albans and Franklin county, Vt., however, his triumphant reelection means that another Green mountain boy has gone away from home and made good. There may be all kinds of political import in this Massachusetts election; there may be any amount of variance of opinion as to just how useful Governor Foss has been in his high office. But he certainly has been able to persuade the greater part of the voters of Massachusetts for the second time that he is exactly the man he represents himself to be. And there is a suspicion, a growing suspicion, on the part of a good many men outside the state that the reelection of this man, once a Republican, on a Democratic ticket, in a solidly Republican state, means something that the patriotic Republicans of the country cannot afford to ignore.—St. Albans Messenger.

JINGLES AND JESTS

An Argument.

When a man has been out till 2:30 a. m. And he rises at 6, as he must, The taste of his coffee he's sure to condemn.

And his breakfast food censures as dust.

He's apt to be grouchy and growl at his wife.

To get on his high horse and prance, And so, gentle Nell, I can't see for my life.

Why you want to drag me to a dance.

When a man has been married for two years or more,

And accustomed to going to bed At 10 in the evening, he's apt to get sore

If it's 3 when he pillows his head, Life isn't the same as it used to be.

When he was youthful and full of romance,

And I can't for the life of me see (once again)

Why you want to drag me to a dance.

When a man has worked hard through the heat of the day

And wants to turn in to his rest, A lot of harsh words he is certain to say

If you make him dress up in his best, The morning will find him as cross as a bear.

For a smile then you haven't a chance, And I can't for the life of me see, I declare,

Why you want to drag me to a dance.

His Luck.

That Doesn't Require Charter, Bond, or Cash Deposit.

It is broad and liberal in its contracts and anybody can become a stockholder. The price of the stock is left entirely with the purchaser. It is what is generally termed health insurance. The stock is good as gold and any stockholder who becomes dissatisfied can withdraw every cent he has paid in at any time. This stock comes in liquid form and called Sulpho-Naphthol, which, by the way, can be found fresh from the manufacturers at the Depot Square Drug store, corner Main and Merchants streets. P. Conditions of Indescribable Filth at the Home of Rutland Man.

Rutland, Nov. 14.—After he had pleaded guilty yesterday to charges of non-support of his children and beating them, Ellsworth Mott of this city, who is said to be a "dope fiend," was sent to the county jail for six months by City Judge F. G. Swinerton. Grand Juror C. B. Costello, who prosecuted, said that arrangements would be made to properly care for the man's children and also his wife, who is feeble minded.

The grand juror received a complaint against Mott about two weeks ago and went to the house to investigate. He found conditions of filth indescribable, the children unfed and without fall or proper clothing. As the father has steadily worked at the Howe Scale works at $1.65 per day, Mr. Costello gave him an opportunity to improve matters, but nothing was done, and yesterday's arrest is the result. The Motts have four children, ranging in age from seven months to eight years. The oldest girl was cut and bleeding when the officers first saw her.

13 REGISTERED NURSES

All the New Candidates Passed the State Board Examinations.

Burlington, Nov. 15.—The Vermont board of registration of nurses with the full number, consisting of Dr. C. A. Gale of Rutland, Miss E. Myrtle Miller of St. Johnsbury, and Dr. D. C. Hawley of this city, present, held a meeting at the Van Ness house last evening to complete the marking of the papers of the candidates who appeared at the examination in Montpelier on the 9th inst. All of the 13 candidates were found to have passed the examination very creditably and certificates will be granted to them, thus making 237 registered nurses in this state.

Out of the 13 who passed, seven were graduates from the Mary Fletcher hospital and are residents of Burlington. They are the Misses Elsie Barrett, Florence A. Strong, Elizabeth Hansen, Mabel Wright, Enla B. Cooper, Blanche P. Miller and Lillian S. Tracy. Of the others, three are graduates of the Rutland hospital, being the Misses Harriet M. Samson, Mildred L. Burnham and Maude E. Leonard. Miss Helen Beavins of St. Albans and the Misses Ida J. Barnard and E. Myrtle Miller of St. Johnsbury, all of whom are graduates of the hospitals at their homes, make up the 13. Miss Miller of St. Johnsbury was not obliged to take the examination as she had already qualified to register because she had graduated from a recognized institution previous to the first of last January, but she took the examinations notwithstanding. Five candidates, in addition to the 13, were also admitted last evening upon showing their diplomas as graduates of a recognized hospital, previous to January first.

With the marks given on the scale of 100, the lowest paper examined last evening was found to have attained an average of over 83, when 75 is sufficient to pass. The next examination will be held in May at a place yet to be decided upon.
